People with cancer often find it hard to fall asleep and stay asleep. Tell your doctor or nurse if you have trouble sleeping 3 or more nights a week or if trouble sleeping affects you during the day.

What works to improve sleep?

- Create routines
  - Go to bed only when sleepy and at about the same time each night.
  - Get up at the same time each day, even on weekends and non-work days.
  - Create a bedtime routine. Wind down 1 to 2 hours before bedtime. Do something to relax. Read, listen to music, do meditation or muscle relaxation. Take a warm bath or shower.
  - Set aside a daytime “worry time” to think about what worries you. This helps you be more relaxed at bedtime.
  - Expose yourself to bright natural light for 20 to 30 minutes each day. It is best to do this in the morning.

- Make your bedroom a restful place
  - Keep the bedroom dark, cool and quiet.
  - Don’t use cell phones, tablets, computers, or watch TV in the bedroom. The light from screens can interrupt your sleep.

- Don’t drink caffeine after noon. Don’t smoke, drink alcohol or eat heavy or spicy meals too close to bedtime. If you are hungry a protein snack is best.

- If you can’t fall asleep or fall back to sleep, leave the bedroom and relax in a dark, quiet and comfortable place. Go back to bed only when sleepy.

If you keep having trouble sleeping even though you are doing these things tell your doctor or nurse.

Things that might also help

- Get physical activity during the day.
Other information

- Studies have shown that herbal supplements, medicines and over the counter remedies don’t improve sleep for people with cancer.
- For more info, visit National Sleep Foundation at www.sleepfoundation.org

Notes