The PEP team reviewed evidence for a new type of intervention: orientation and information provision. The intervention differs from psychoeducation because it involves one-way provision of information and does not involve direct interaction with healthcare providers. The evidence was a single study showing that an informational booklet had no effect and was categorized as Effectiveness Not Established.

Spiritual intervention evidence was categorized as Effectiveness Not Established. Evidence was one single-group study in which the intervention was not fully described.

Healthcare provider intervention, a new item, was categorized as Effectiveness Not Established. The study showed no effect of healthcare provider education and use of resource manuals.
